The story is set in the Salinas Valley of California, a region that Steinbeck knew well and loved deeply. The protagonist is a young man named Jim, who is working as a ranch hand on his family's property. Jim is a thoughtful and introspective young man, and he spends much of his time observing the natural world around him.

One day, Jim comes across a field of wildflowers that are blooming in all their glory. The flowers are a riot of color and beauty, and Jim is immediately captivated by their loveliness. He spends hours sitting in the field, simply gazing at the flowers and marveling at their delicate beauty.

As Jim sits in the field, he begins to reflect on the nature of beauty and love. He realizes that the flowers are not only beautiful in and of themselves, but they are also a symbol of the beauty and love that exists in the world.

Jim thinks about the woman he loves, a young woman named Susan. He realizes that Susan is as beautiful as the flowers, and that his love for her is as pure and innocent as the beauty of the flowers. Jim knows that his love for Susan is the most important thing in his life, and he is determined to protect and cherish it.
