"No, I won't," said Peter.

"Yes, you will," said his mother.

"No, I won't," said Peter.

This went on for several minutes, until finally, Peter's mother got so angry that she spanked him.

"Now go eat your soup," she said.

Peter Piper went to the table and sat down. He looked at the bowl of pea soup in front of him and sighed. He knew he had to eat it, but he didn't want to.

He took a deep breath and started to eat. The first spoonful was mushy, just like he thought it would be. But the second spoonful was a little better. And the third spoonful was even better than that.

By the time Peter Piper had finished his soup, he realized that he actually liked it. He ate the whole bowl and asked for seconds.

Peter's mother was very happy. "I'm so glad you liked your soup, Peter," she said. "Now you know that you can't judge a book by its cover."

Peter Piper smiled. "You're right, Mom," he said. "I'll never be a picky eater again."

And from that day on, Peter Piper ate everything that was put in front of him, no matter what it started with.
