Meg is attending the prestigious Caerphilly Music Festival when world-famous conductor Sir Malcolm Grahame is found dead in his dressing room. The police are quick to rule the death a suicide, but Meg isn't convinced. She knows that Sir Malcolm was a brilliant musician and a devoted family man. There's no way he would have taken his own life.

Meg decides to investigate the murder herself, and she soon discovers that Sir Malcolm had a number of secrets. He was having an affair with a young violinist, and he was also deeply in debt. Meg also learns that Sir Malcolm had a falling out with his second-in-command, who was fired just days before the murder.

As Meg digs deeper into the case, she uncovers a web of lies and deceit. She realizes that anyone could have killed Sir Malcolm, and she must race against time to find the killer before they strike again.
