The United Nations and International Law

The United Nations (UN) is an international organization that was founded in 1945. The UN's mission is to maintain international peace and security, promote human rights, and foster social and economic development.

The UN has played a significant role in the development of international law. The UN Charter is a treaty that sets out the principles and purposes of the organization. The Charter has been interpreted by the International Court of Justice (ICJ) to be a source of international law.

The UN has also adopted a number of conventions and declarations that have codified international law. These include the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

The UN has also established a number of international courts and tribunals. These include the ICJ, the International Criminal Court, and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. These courts and tribunals have jurisdiction to adjudicate disputes between states and individuals.
