- Human nature is inherently selfish and competitive. Black argues that humans are naturally inclined to seek their own self-interest, even at the expense of others. This selfishness is the root of all political conflict and oppression.

- The state is a necessary evil. Black believes that the state is necessary to protect us from our own worst impulses. However, he also argues that the state is always a potential threat to our liberty.
- There is no such thing as a perfect society. Black believes that all societies are flawed and that there is no such thing as a utopia. However, he also argues that we should strive to create a society that is as just and equitable as possible.

Critique of Black's Philosophy

Black's political philosophy has been criticized on a number of grounds. One criticism is that it is too pessimistic. Black's view of human nature is very dark, and he seems to believe that there is little hope for improving the human condition. This pessimism can be discouraging, and it can lead people to give up on trying to make the world a better place.

Another criticism of Black's philosophy is that it is too utopian. Black's ideal society is a society in which there is no conflict or oppression. However, this ideal is unrealistic, and it is unlikely that any society could ever achieve it. This utopianism can be frustrating, and it can lead people to feel that they are wasting their time trying to make the world a better place.

Finally, some critics have argued that Black's philosophy is too impractical. Black does not offer any specific solutions to the problems of the world. Instead, he simply argues that we should strive to create a more just and equitable society. This lack of practicality can be frustrating, and it can lead people to feel that Black's philosophy is not relevant to the real world.

Malcolm Black is a provocative and original political philosopher. However, his philosophy has also been criticized for being too pessimistic, utopian, and impractical. Whether or not you agree with Black's ideas, there is no doubt that he is a thinker who has made a significant contribution to political philosophy.
