One theory is that the song originated in the African-American spiritual tradition. Spirituals were songs that were sung by slaves in the United States, and they often expressed themes of hope and freedom. Many spirituals used call-and-response format, and When the Saints Go Marching In may have originated as a call-and-response song between a preacher and a congregation.

Another theory is that the song originated in the военных bands. Military bands often played marches, and When the Saints Go Marching In may have been inspired by one of these marches. The song's marching rhythm and tempo certainly support this theory.
